Eisenhower Commands 7th Army

THE Press Association Correspondent at Allied Supreme Headquarters states:—

Only two days after the announcement that a sixth Allied army was in France, the formation of a new army group, the 6th, was announced last night. It is commanded by Lieutenant-General Jacob L. Devers, until now Deputy-Supreme Commander in the Mediterranean theatre.

The 6th Army Group is composed of American and French units, which suggests that it is located in the South of France, where General Patch's 7th Army has been operating.

General Eisenhower, it was also announced, yesterday took over command of the 7th Army, which has joined forces with the other Allied armies in the north. This puts under General Eisenhower's command all Allied forces operating against Germany in Western Europe.

The correspondent added:—

The broad picture of the fighting on Germany's western wall last night was that a gash eight miles deep had been made in the Siegfried Line around Aachen, while further south the Allied troops which crossed the Reich frontier east of Eupen had captured Lammersdorf, two miles south-east of Roetgen, the first German town to fall into Allied hands.

On the Moselle the situation is still obscure, but Allied bridgeheads east of the river are being steadily strengthened, while forces spread southward are consolidating the link-up with the 7th Army.

There is fierce fighting at all points where the Americans have come up against the Siegfried Line. The Germans are in strong prepared positions, supporting each other with cross-fire, minefields and anti-tank guns.

The latest estimate of the numbers of the German garrisons in the Channel ports is: Boulogne, 7,300; Calais, 5,200; Dunkirk, 9,600.

Allies Capture Nancy And Epinal

AMERICAN FORCES MADE FURTHER PROGRESS YESTERDAY IN THEIR OFFENSIVE AGAINST THE SIEGFRIED LINE.

Reuter reports from the front last night said that Aachen, the German industrial city just inside the frontier, was surrounded, and that fighting was going on in the suburbs.

Advancing east of Aachen, the U.S. forces have reached Stolberg, 30 miles from Cologne.

The capture of Nancy, Epinal and Charmes was announced last night. These towns in the Moselle defence region were regarded as fortresses in advance of the lower Siegfried Line.

Early this morning a Reuter report from the front stated that infantry of the American 1st Army had broken through the main Siegfried Line.

Reuter, A.P. and P.A.

The Americans have driven ten miles into Germany north of Trier. Other U.S. forces are in the outskirts of Aachen, and the town is surrounded and within the Allies' grasp. Beyond Aachen American troops have thrust forward to Stolberg, south of Aachen, and have taken Lammerskorf.

General Hodge's troops have captured Maastricht, fifteen miles north-west of Aachen, and the first Dutch city to fall into Allied hands.

Reuter's special correspondent at Allied Supreme Headquarters states that engineers and flame-throwing infantry, pressing forward under a heavy umbrella of high explosive from tank guns and forward artillery, are spearheading General Hodge's four-pronged assault as it plunges deeper into the Siegfried Line. The battle is grim, slow, but satisfactory.

Nancy is now in American hands, it was officially confirmed last night. General Patton's forces, driving through heavy machine-gun and mortar fire in the Forêt du Haye, have also completely surrounded the city.

Epinal, 40 miles south-east of Nancy, was also taken by American troops yesterday.

FORTRESS CITY

Epinal, capital of the Vosges Department, and roughly midway between Nancy and Belfort, is one of the three fortress cities barring the way to Germany through the Vosges. The other two are Toul and Belfort. Toul is already in Allied hands.

All the lateral roads east of Epinal lead over passes of some considerable height before the Strasbourg-Colmar-Mulhouse valley is reached.

The liberation of Nancy leaves Metz as the only large French city in German hands. Its capture broke the back of the Germans' last stand in France, and from Pont-a-Mousson to 15 miles south of Nancy the German Army is in full retreat towards the Siegfried Line. American armour forced the Germans to withdraw from Nancy without even a rearguard stand when they crossed the river behind the infantry near Pont-a-Mousson, cut through the German lines, and then turned south behind the town.

Nancy is little damaged either by bombings or by the withdrawal.

Lyons radio said last night that American troops had reached a point 37 miles from Cologne.

"The decisive battle for the West Wall has started," states Berlin reports, quoted by the Scandinavian Telegraph Bureau. Berlin added that "the most dangerous attack is that which is sweeping past on both sides of Aachen."

The Koelnische Zeitung announced the evacuation of Aachen by civilians, and said that other districts in Western Germany would have to be evacuated by people, who would now endure still more suffering.

A headlong attack by the infantry on a wide front east of Aachen found the Siegfried Line weakly defended in places. In some sectors apparent defensive positions turned out to be fakes. The Americans were well supported by tanks, but it was essentially a victory for the infantry.

Canadian troops who crossed the Leopold Canal, near Moerkerke, two days ago were forced to withdraw yesterday after meeting fierce opposition, mainly from artillery and mortar fire.

Later in the day Canadian patrols went back over the canal, crossing at six different points after stiff resistance. The position of the Canadians along the canal has greatly improved.

East of this Canadian force threatening the German rearguard on the Dutch frontier Polish troops are now right on the Netherlands border, north of St. Nicolas.

Brest in Flames

Major-General Ramoke has sent the following radio message to Herr Hitler from the blazing fortress of Brest, says the German News Agency:—

"My Fuehrer — Repeated calls to surrender by Major-General Troy Middleton, commanding the American troops, have been refused.

"The battle has reached its climax. The great material superiority of the enemy has led to the destruction of the fortress works. The remnants of the garrison are fighting in the ruins of the town and fortress, faithful to their oath of allegiance."

The German News Agency added: "Brest is ablaze from one end to the other. Columns of smoke, so thick that they obscure the sunlight, mingle with clouds of dust as the American shells and bombs and German demolition charges blow up whole sections of the town.

"German demolition squads have methodically dynamited all harbour buildings, port installations, machinery and ships. The harbour is to-day only a heap of rubble.

"German troops, marines and sailors are still fighting to the last cartridge, and are making a determined stand north of Fort Keranroux, where the enemy broke into the town defences. The German defenders have only a few guns left."

Million London Houses Damaged

Lord Woolton, British Minister of Reconstruction, disclosed last night that 23,000 houses or flats were destroyed in London during the flying bomb attacks, and 1,104,000 damaged. In a large proportion the damage was slight.

In the raids from 1940 to the spring of this year damage figures were 84,000 houses destroyed and 142,000 still to be repaired, of which 42,000 were not fit for occupation.

Figures for total damage, covering air-raids and flying bombs in the London area, are 107,000 houses destroyed, which, at an average of 4.5 persons per home, represents accommodation for half a million people; 170,000 seriously damaged and in need of repair, and 700,000—which have received first-aid repairs—needing further work to make them reasonably comfortable.

Giving details of the labour employed in repairs and demolition in London, Lord Woolton said that on September 12th 83,000 men were engaged, of whom 21,000 had been specially brought into London and 5,000 were Service personnel. More were needed for repairs, especially craftsmen.

The amount of material needed was "stupendous," including 150,000,000 tiles and slates, 200,000,000 square feet of ceiling and wallboard, and 50,000,000 square feet of glass.

"We have not previously thought it wise to let the country know the magnitude of the problem in London," said Lord Woolton.

Lord Woolton expressed the hope that people who had been fortunate enough to find hospitality and safety outside London during these last few months would have the wisdom to stay where they are until they get the "all clear."

Vichy Ministers For Trial

The French Minister of Justice stated yesterday that four prominent Vichy Ministers had been brought back from Algiers for trial, among them Marcel Peyrouton, Minister for the Interior under M. Laval.

Others were Pierre-Etienne Flandin, Minister for Foreign Affairs under Admiral Darlan; General Borgeret, Minister for Air under Darlan; and Tixier-Vignancourt, the former Vichy Secretary in charge of broadcasting.—(Associated Press.)

Cork Wants Direct Coal Imports

Replying to protests by Cork Harbour Board against the prohibition of direct coal imports into Cork, the Ministry of Supplies wrote repeating the explanation that imports via Dublin were necessary to secure a quick turn-about of shipping. While realising the hardships on Cork, the Minister was not yet in a position to permit the discharge of coal-carrying vessels at Cork.

Armistice Terms Talks In Quebec?

SPECULATION that Mr. Eden's conferences on Thursday night and yesterday may result in the "unconditional surrender" demand to Germany being modified, has had a cool reception in official circles, Reuter's Special Correspondent in Quebec stated last night.

The two main points made in the argument against such a possibility are:—

"1.—Allied prestige would be severely weakened if less were accepted after so many declarations by Mr. Churchill and President Roosevelt that the war would be waged until Germany's unconditional surrender.

"2.—The war in Europe is now at the victory stage. To accept anything less than total surrender would be to mock countless thousands who have sweated, bled, suffered and died to achieve unconditional victory."

Correspondents who talked "off the record" with President Roosevelt during his recent Pacific tour, when the High Command for total war against Japan was decided upon, are emphatic in saying that he is determined on absolute victory and nothing else.

Persons here who are close to Mr. Churchill reiterate the Prime Minister's conviction that Germany must surrender unconditionally.

RUSSIAN ATTITUDE

Following Mr. Eden's arrival in Quebec, it was anticipated that discussion would concentrate on:—

A re-statement of the circumstances under which either Germany or Japan may ask for and obtain an armistice for a discussion of peace terms;

Consideration of the serious diplomatic problem created by the unyielding attitude of Russia towards Poland, and Soviet reluctance fully to share in a discussion of immediate war aims;

An exchange of views of recommendations so far formulated at the Dumbarton Oaks Post-War Security Conference, first to the Big Four, and later to the United and Associated Nations and Governments looking toward the creation of a new League of Nations.

The first item, involving a revision of the unconditional surrender Casablanca ultimatum, cannot usefully be decided without Russian acquiescence as far as Germany is concerned.

She is, doubtless, anxious to fight on, but the British and American attitude favours the prevention of needless waste of Allied youth as soon as possible by an armistice.

The varying views of Russia and her English-speaking allies on the Polish question is another immediate and pressing problem.

TALKS END TO-DAY

The Quebec Conference will close to-day, but the quick pace of the European war may hold Mr. Churchill and President Roosevelt in personal contact for further conversations, the Associated Press staff correspondent in Quebec states.

The world will hear some of the results of the conference shortly after midday to-day.

Mr. Stephen Early, President Roosevelt's Secretary, said that discussions by the British and American Chiefs of Staffs might go on after Mr. Churchill and the President have finished their talks in Quebec.

COMMUNIST PROTEST

Humanité, organ of the French Communist Party, protested emphatically yesterday against the Anglo-American attitude towards France in connection with the Quebec Conference, the Associated Press correspondent in Paris states. The newspaper complained first about French representation there being confined, so far as is known, to the informal proximity of the French Minister to Canada, M. Gabriel Bonneau, who was called in at previous Quebec conferences.

It also asserted that France's desire for participation in discussions about Europe was treated by the Allies as a pretension rather than an established right, and expressed surprise that the occupation of Germany should be discussed without France being included automatically.

"We understand," Humanité added, "that the President and the Prime Minister will examine the rôle of France, who asserts her right to be considered as a Power equal to the others. That right is not recognised—an impossible situation. France has a right and a duty to assert, and she will play her full rôle in Europe and in the whole world."

Mr. Eden's journey by aeroplane from England to Quebec occupied 17½ hours, and not 7½ hours, as was stated in error yesterday.

VETERINARY RESEARCH NEEDED IN IRELAND

THE necessity for intensive veterinary research in the interests of the bloodstock industry in particular was stressed by Mr. Harry O'Leary, the well-known veterinary surgeon, in the course of an interview with an Irish Times reporter. He visualised the setting up of an adequately equipped laboratory by the Government.

He said there would be inevitably a post-war, world-wide demand for Irish bloodstock, and that already transactions are being carried through. England, India, America, France and other countries will all be in the market, and bloodstock will soar to very high prices.

England's brood mare population, he said, had fallen to 29 per cent. of what it was before the war, according to the latest published statistics. He was afraid that they would be unable to meet the demand without seriously depleting the home market. Many breeders would part with their mares when offered tempting prices, and only the wealthy owners were in the happy position to retain them.

EQUINE DISEASES

Stressing the need for research with a view to eradicating equine diseases, Mr. O'Leary said that only a mean bagatelle was being spent on this work in this country compared with other countries. He understood that this question of research was receiving sympathetic consideration from the powers that be. He hoped that it would be tackled seriously in the very near future to help the veterinary profession, who were trying to hold the industry together with little remuneration and little or no help from the research point of view. It was high time that in a livestock country like this that ample research facilities should be made available for the development and protection of this great industry, and that they should not continue to be dependent on other countries for scientific products, such as penicillin, as they were forced to do at present.

The research into sterility in mares would be of enormous advantage to the country as a whole. There were about 30% of such mares in this country, and he believed that, with proper facilities, this percentage could be reduced to about 5%.

The veterinary profession placed high hopes in the potentialities of penicillin to help them to combat diseases in animals. In America great strides were being made in this direction, and new formulæ were being sought to make more effective the use of this drug in a purified form for the treatment of both animal and human diseases. In this respect he was surprised at the statement the Department recently published in the Press regarding the manufacture of penicillin. From his study of American veterinary literature, together with what he had seen in the Veterinary College, Ballsbridge, he understood that penicillin presented no difficulty in its production in its crude form—the process was a simple one, and the equipment that might be necessary to produce it in its purified form, he understood, could be manufactured if necessary by Irish craftsmen.

Dail On Four Days Next Week

There will be between 150 and 200 amendments for the Committee stage of the Transport Bill when the Dail meets next Tuesday. This will be the chief business for the week. A four days' sitting is contemplated. It is likely that a motion will be made on Tuesday, or later, for the appointment of a Deputy Speaker.

With the Drainage Bill and some other measures, which have not yet been introduced, there will be sufficient business to keep the Dail in session till the Christmas holidays.

During the recess Leinster House has undergone a general cleaning up, and several changes have been made. The changes include a re-arrangement of the existing telephone call offices and the addition of others. The post office has been removed from its old position near the main entrance to a point further down the corridor.

German "Explosive Boats"

A German naval spokesman, quoted by the German News Agency, yesterday declared that the remote-controlled explosive boats being used against the Allied invasion fleet off the Channel coast have already accounted for 35 transports, totalling 225,000 tons.

He described this new naval weapon as consisting of two boats, the actual "explosive boat"—which develops great speed, and is similar to the speedboats well known in peace-time—and a more strongly-built "commando boat."

The commando boat finds the target and takes the explosive boat to a point within easy range of the target. Each boat is steered by one man.

Aran Islanders Want Decent Livelihood

A DECLINE in Aran's fishing industry, throwing over 100 of the sturdiest young islanders on the dole through spring and winter, and the virtual disappearance since the war of tourists, are making Aran islanders discontented.

The average islander seems to hate doles. Pat Mullen, hero of the film "Man of Aran," and one of the best known figures on the three islands, with whom an Irish Times reporter stayed for nearly a week, said: "If you're going to write anything for God's sake tell the Government that we do not want their doles; we hate free money; the only thing we want is a decent livelihood." Similar sentiments coloured the talk of most of the fifty other Aran men with whom the reporter discussed island life.

Week after week last winter nearly 200 men, most of them powerful specimens of vigorous manhood, shambled idly up the crooked hill to Kilronan Civic Guard station to receive their few shillings of "Government money," as they term it. When the dole was stopped during summer and autumn many of them went to England or to the Kildare bogs for seasonal work, and sent home their savings, but the majority stayed at home for the fishing.

Families who manage to coax vegetables from their rocky fields, and who can graze a cow and feed a few bonhams, live in frugal comfort, but there are many scenes of bitter poverty. Fishing, tourism, the gathering of seaweed for kelp, and the money sent home by the exiles are the mainstays of the islanders.

VILLAGE'S DECAY

Thirty years ago Killeaney, on the main island, was one of Ireland's busiest fishing villages. Forty fishing boats used to sail into its pier, which now accommodates no more than two boats. A veteran south-coast fisherman blames the lack of markets for the village's decay. Aran lost the English market after the last war, he said. From 1914 to 1918 single mackerel fishermen made anything from £15 to £20 a week. This war brought no boom, and no fisherman earns more than £30 for the season from April to June.

While speaking mainly in Gaelic to one another, few of the islanders to whom the reporter spoke show any interest in the Gaelic revival movement, beyond welcoming the £2 subsidy scheme. America, Iceland, Alaska are as near to them as Dublin, Belfast or Cork. Most of the 500 families on Inishmore have sent at least one son to sea.

Several nights a week one of the houses is filled with the sound of music and dancing, as the boys and girls gather for a ceilidhe—their only amusement. The talk there is bilingual. Groups of children gathered on the street on Sunday seemed to speak entirely in English.

In St. Enda's graveyard, reputed to be the resting place of fourteen ancient Irish saints, about 90 per cent. of the monuments and headstones dating from 1800 to 1944 are inscribed in English.

Tuberculosis is Aran's chief health worry. Within the past fifty years few families have escaped it. Apart from that, the health is excellent.

A daily steamship sailing between Inishmore and Costello Bay would be welcomed. The only connection at the moment is the Dun Aengus, which sails from Galway weekly, in addition to Sunday excursions for trippers. Recently a letter in the Irish Times complained of alleged infrequent calls to the smaller islands by the steamer. The Minister for Supplies wrote to the steamship company asking for an explanation, and it is understood that a reply is being sent stating that on a specific date there were no passengers or supplies for the smaller islands, and that the islanders are satisfied with the present service.

Russians Massing For Final Warsaw Battle

THE final battle for Warsaw, which is expected to be the fiercest and bloodiest of this year's Eastern front campaign, appears to be at hand.

Big German forces have been drawn up in the area, says Reuter's special correspondent in Moscow, while Marshal Rokossovsky also has been accumulating his forces, and his mighty armies, with their Polish allies, are eager to begin the storming of the city at the earliest possible moment.

It was reported at a Polish Cabinet meeting in London last night that General Bor, Commander of the Polish Home Army, which for 45 days has been fighting the Germans in Warsaw, is in contact with the commander of the Red Army forces now entering the city. Supplies from Russia also have reached the Polish forces.

On the struggle now looming over the smoke-hung Polish capital and the Vistula rests the fate of the Germans' last-ditch defence before the Reich.

Into the Narew-Warsaw-Vistula front, it is now disclosed, the Germans have poured hundreds of tons of concrete and steel in a bid to construct another Eastern Wall. A major breach already has been forced in these defences by the storming of Praga, Warsaw's suburb on the east bank of the Vistula.

PRAGA WRECKED

In driving right up to the Vistula opposite Warsaw, Marshal Rokossovsky has bared the way to what is at present the most vital "bolt position" on the Eastern front, and the general feeling in Moscow is that big developments are imminent.

Eight thousand Germans were killed in the fighting for Praga in four days, says the supplement to last night's Soviet communiqué.

Praga itself has largely been wrecked by the prolonged fighting for it.

Last night's Soviet communiqué said that North of Praga Russian troops, in co-operation with the 1st Polish Army, in hard fighting forged ahead and occupied a number of inhabited localities, including Rynia.

On the Rumanian front, Russian and Rumanian forces are moving swiftly on Transylvania's most important city, Cluj, which is within less than a normal day's advance and is likely to fall at any time.

According to the Soviet communiqué, in Northern Transylvania the Russians operating jointly with Rumanian forces, occupied the town and railway station of Toplica and fought their way into more than 40 other inhabited localities, including the railway station of Sovata.

Forty Soviet rifle divisions and several tank brigades are engaged in a new Baltic offensive, according to the German commentator, Colonel von Hammer, who said that the offensive is designed to "whittle down the German fronts in Latvia and Estonia." The Russians, he said, tried to catch the defence in a pincer movement by major operations from the area of Bauske—40 miles south of Riga and about 25 miles south-east of Mitau—and south of Lake Wirz. At Bauske they succeeded in crossing the River Memel east of the town.

German Landing Attempt On Finnish Island

NINE German ships were sunk by Finnish coastal artillery fire when a German landing was attempted on the Island of Hogland, in the Gulf of Finland, on Thursday night—the same night as the Russian peace terms were handed to the Finnish delegation in Moscow.

A German officer landed on the little holiday island and fighting began when his surrender demand received a flat refusal from the Finnish commander.

Nine of the vessels were sunk by coastal artillery, and the attack repelled at all points, except one, where mopping up was reported to be going on.

Russian peace terms were handed to the Finnish delegation in Moscow on Thursday night, it was learned authoritatively in Helsinki last night.

An Associated Press despatch from the Finnish capital says official sources declared that the text of the terms had nothing to do with the stroke suffered by the Finnish Premier, Hackzell, a member of the delegation. It was pointed out that Hackzell took ill four hours before the terms were handed over.

Politically informed quarters in Helsinki say that 58-year-old Urho Castren, President of Finland's Supreme Court, may succeed Hackzell.

The sources asserted that they had no details of the terms. The Finnish Parliament held a regular session, which lasted only eight minutes. No announcement was made except that Parliament would meet again to-day.

The Germans have closed the northern part of the Finnish-Swedish frontier, it was officially announced last night.—(Reuter.)

Summer Time

DOUBLE Summer Time ends to-morrow morning in Northern Ireland and Great Britain. Clocks and watches will be put back one hour, and will correspond with Summer Time in operation in Eire.

Fierce Fight For Rimini Bottleneck

THE 8th Army in Italy have only one more hill feature to capture before it enters the great plains of the Po Valley, Reuter's special correspondent at Allied Headquarters, Italy, stated last night.

After an assault against the eastern end of the Gothic Line defences, Canadian tanks and infantry crossed the Marano river, and are within five miles of Rimini. The 7,000 yards long Coriano Ridge is in Allied hands. Greek troops, whose presence with the 8th Army is indicated for the first time, advanced along the coast road towards the village of San Lorenzo.

General Leese's new attack against the Rimini bottleneck made surprising headway in its second day, and the Germans suffered heavily. The break-through, however, is not complete. Counter-attacks were fierce, and the German shelling is something to be remembered.

The advance up the coast from the 8th Army bridgehead across the Marano is meeting bitter opposition. It took two days to mop up the Panzer Grenadiers holding Coriano village. British infantry and tanks surrounded the whole of the 289th Panzer Grenadier Regiment, belonging to the 98th German Infantry Division, 600 of whom were captured and many more killed.

The Germans counter-attacked with tanks at Passano, but were thrown back with great losses, and many tanks were knocked out.

British troops were yesterday only 2,000 yards from the eastern border of the tiny Republic of San Marino, which, it was officially stated yesterday, was being used by Marshal Kesserling for transport supplies and for gun emplacements.

Finalists in A.R.P. Competitions

First results of the National A.R.P. competitions, which are now being held in Dublin, were announced last night as follows:—

Casualty Service (maximum marks 400)—Qualified for the final: Kerry Co. (263), Dublin Co. (286), Cork (272), Dublin (244), Waterford (221), Dun Laoghaire (296), Dundalk (282), Limerick (294).

Auxiliary Service—Qualified for the final: Dublin Co. (381), Tipperary N.R. (360), Dun Laoghaire (407), Drogheda (396), Limerick (400), Tipperary S.R. (417), Cork (415), Mayo Co. (373), Cork Co. (432), Dublin (375).

Decontamination Service—Qualified for the final: Limerick (232), Cork (262), Tipperary N.R. (221), Cork Co. (215), Dun Laoghaire (319).

The order given is the order in which the teams will compete in the final.

Potential Leaders Not Given Chance

Speaking at a public meeting in East Belfast last night, Councillor W. M. Wilton declared that Ulster to-day had no leaders either in Church or State. While in the ranks of the Orange Order there were potential leaders, they were not being given a chance to come forward.

Referring to Mr. Churchill's recent visit to His Holiness the Pope, Mr. Wilton said that he did not care if Mr. Churchill was the greatest leader Britain had ever had; he had undone 25 p.c. of his leadership by associating with the Pope. The influence on Ministers of Roman Catholic members of the British Civil Service had reached the stage when it had to be regarded as a very serious matter.

HURRICANE SWEEPS AMERICA

DAMAGE estimated at millions of dollars has been caused by a 140 m.p.h. hurricane now sweeping America, says a Reuter message from New York.

The course of the hurricane, as plotted by service pilots, is expected to strike St. John, New Brunswick, and rush on to the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Fishermen have been warned to make for the nearest port, and ships are running for shelter with everything battened down.

One estimate puts the damage in eleven States through which the hurricane has so far passed at thirty million dollars (£7,500,000). Already fourteen deaths have been reported.

Long Branch, New Jersey, reports damage totalling £250,000; Atlantic City, New Jersey, £1,000,000, and Compton, Mass., £25,000. Three hundred thousand telephones are out of order from Pennsylvania to Maine.

A curious feature is that the hurricane left untouched over 90 per cent. of the crops in one valley, where farmers remember gales which laid waste crops in half-an-hour.

In New York the hurricane toppled trees over by the score. Skyscrapers swayed, and hundreds of office workers were deskbound.

The streets gushed with water. It was five feet deep in many places, and rushed down the subways in miniature waterfalls.

Repeated interruptions of the signalling system in Long Island caused many stoppages in train services. Hundreds of motor cars were stalled on the roads.

The opening ceremonies of the U.N.R.R.A. conference at Montreal have been postponed, because delegates have been delayed by the hurricane.

Mr. Mackenzie King, Canadian Prime Minister, who was due to speak yesterday, will give his address at noon on Monday.

New Landings In Pacific

JAPAN'S last big stronghold in the Central Pacific is being stormed by American Army and marine forces. The stronghold is the Palau Island group, in the Western Carolines, 650 miles north-east of the Halmahera group, where General MacArthur's forces landed at Morotai Island almost simultaneously.

The Palau landings were made under cover of a terrific bombardment by carrier planes and warships, which included some of America's newest and heaviest battleships. The islands on which the landings were made have not been named. A communiqué from Admiral Nimitz said the landings were continuing under stiff opposition.

The Palau Islands are of great strategical importance, as they command the sea and air routes from China and Japan to New Guinea and the Western Netherlands East Indies.

General MacArthur, in a statement from the Morotai beachhead, on Halmahera Island, 300 miles from the Philippines, said yesterday:—"Our position here is secure, and the immediate operation has served its purpose. We now dominate the Moluccas."

Admiral Naokuni Nomura has been removed from his post as Commander of the Yokosuka Naval Station, in Tokyo Bay—to which he was appointed only on August 2nd—according to a Tokyo broadcast. Vice-Admiral Nishio Tsukahar, Chief of the Naval Air Force, succeeds him. Nomura has been "promoted to an undisclosed important post." Vice-Admiral Machitaro Tozuko has been appointed Chief of the Naval Aviation Headquarters.—(Reuter.)

Two persons were killed and four injured when an American single-seater aircraft crashed on a house in Dovedale road, Leicester, yesterday. The dead are the pilot and a woman employed as a cleaner at the house.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

A Family History

The House of de la Pomerai. By Edward B. Powley. Liverpool University Press. (Limited Edition.)

THE family of Pomeroy is sprung from Ralf de la Pomerai, whose Norman castle was near Falaise, but who, on coming to England with William the Conqueror, received 57 manors in Devonshire and two in Somersetshire. The head of the family came to reside at Berry Pomeroy in Devonshire, and in that county and in Cornwall the name has remained to this day. The Pomeroys are a proud race and have found several chroniclers. The Gentleman's Magazine, recording the death on May 6th, 1813, of one Thomas Pomeroy, Esq., asserted that "this gentleman had till lately the spurs and spoon given by the Conqueror at his coronation to his ancestor." A correspondent immediately inquired regarding the spurs and spoon possessed "until lately": "Did he pawn them?"

Mr. Powley has taken infinite pains over his reasearch, which is a model of mediæval genealogical study. He records in succession the heads of the family, gives notice of all cadet Pomeroys that he has encountered in his researches, but makes no attempt to co-ordinate them all into one massive family tree. The volume therefore is replete with detailed information and singularly free from hazardous guessing.

The Castle

In the sixteenth century the Castle of Berry Pomeroy passed to the family of Seymour, Dukes of Somerset. Up to 1565 the emphasis is on the owner of Berry Pomeroy; thereafter the study is continued in the senior line up to 1720. An appendix includes a select number of Pomeroys from 1720 to our own day. Included in this section is the genealogy of the Irish Viscounts Harberton, sprung from a cadet branch—the Ingesdon Pomeroys—who possessed property in County Kildare. In the Diocese of Armagh there is a parish of Pomeroy of which no mention is made in this volume, and which was not, at any rate since 1700, in the possession of a Pomeroy landlord. The source of the name would be of some interest.

An additional chapter, supported by excellent photographs, is concerned with the present remains of the Castle of Berry Pomeroy, and to some extent its mediæval construction is indicated. There is an excellent bibliography, and the work is firmly based on primary and good secondary sources. It provides a singularly clear case of the slow descent from a Norman Baron to humble positions as a Knight of the Shire and, later, as mere esquire.

Swedish Schools

School For Life: A Study of the Peoples' Colleges in Sweden By F. Margaret Forster. Faber and Faber. 6/- net.

OUR neighbours in Britain are avidly consuming all the information they can obtain upon post-primary education in the other democratic countries of the world. The present intellectual ferment is expected to result in great educational advances, similar to those consequent upon the Fisher Education Act of 1917.

The majority of the Swedish Peoples' Colleges are part-time residential educational establishments, chiefly attended by agricultural and industrial workers between the ages of 18 and 22. They have, in general, a definitely religious and national basis to their instruction, and their aim is cultural rather than vocational. Similar in origin to those of Denmark, they have been more successful in attracting students from the towns, and in stressing other aspects of life than the agricultural.

The cost of the courses and of residence is extraordinarily low, and both Government and local authorities have a greater share of control than in Denmark. Miss Forster gives an interesting account of their methods and working, and discusses their relevance to British conditions. Sir Richard Livingstone, in a short preface, stresses the utility of such a study.

Inside India

We Who Are India. By J. S. Hoyland. Lutterworth Press. 3/6 net.

THIS book is an intimate introduction to the true India, land of peasants and workers. After years spent in actual contact with these people, around village wells and shabby city streets, and out in the fields and forests, Mr. Hoyland is able to present a true picture of conditions as they exist. He shows in convincing manner how India's peasants suffer in times of pestilence and famine, and through their fear of money-lender, labour-jobber, rent-collector and sorcerer. The conditions of life among the mass of India's peasant and urban millions, as they are revealed in the pages of this little book, are not wholly unrecognised in recent years by the Government; it enables the ordinary man in the street to see for himself how vast are the problems which have to be faced.

Writing Surgeon

Surgeon's Symphony. By George Sava. Faber and Faber. 8/6 net.

Mr. George Sava's latest book carries the image of the title rather too far. It is divided into two parts —"Fantasia on a Russian Theme" and "Passacaglia on a Martial Theme," concluding with a "Coda." In matter it is typical Sava, and will appeal to the author's "fans," but by no stretch of any imagination, except the publisher's, can it be described as a "major event." Mr. Sava is at his best when he dissociates his writing from his profession; for about anything connected with medicine he is ineffably romantic.

Gardening

Laurie's Encyclopædia of Gardening. By W. H. Steer. Werner Laurie. 7/6 net.

Here is an A to Z of gardening arranged for quick reference and sure guidance. The plan of the book is to give clear directions and hints for propagation, protection and perfecting of each plant and vegetable. In the case of flowers and shrubs, concise information is given of the class, height and colours and flowering period. A useful and original feature is the inclusion of a couple of hundred or so of practical hints, gathered by the author from records and conversations with professional gardeners and enthusiastic amateurs all over the country.

This book is the result of upwards of forty years of gardening experience, by a writer who, for more than half that time, edited dozens of works on the subject, including the books of such experts as C. H. Middleton and H. H. Thomas. It needs no mention, therefore, that the author knows what he is writing about, and can explain in clear-cut language all those practical operations which contribute to success, whether of old-time or modern methods, in the garden.

EX LIBRIS—18

GEORGE LAWRENCE

By the Countess of Longford

"IF everybody were to say what he knew about anybody, do you think this world would be a possible place to live in?" George Augustus Sala wrote that about the Press notices of George Lawrence's death. But now nobody knows much about Lawrence, either as a man or a novelist, though he was a best-seller for twenty years, and was paid £1,000 for a book. Only a few tattered volumes in second-hand bookshops remind us that he was once read; and I have bought a first edition of his best book for sixpence. He is less remembered than Ouida, who imitated him; but he invented the strong, silent hero of colossal passions, who is next door to a villain; and he is responsible for a line of sheiks and he-men and compelling brutes in fiction from 1857 to the present day. The difference between Lawrence and his imitators, who have been mostly ladies, is that he was a gentleman and a scholar and wrote for men. His works were considered improper reading for women, who probably read them all the more for that reason; they are sprinkled with Greek and Latin quotations, and are written from the man's point of view.

The He-Man

A barrister and the son of a clergyman, Lawrence wrote of High Life, Bohemia, the army, sport, gambling, crookery and, above all, sex. Educated at Rugby and Oxford, he published his first novel, "Guy Livingstone, or Thorough," in the same year that "Tom Brown's Schooldays" appeared, and dealt more violently and sensationally with the same school. Guy at fifteen has a set sternness about the lips and jaw, a deep, square chest and sinewy arms, and fells an enemy to the ground with a brass candlestick. At sixteen he makes love to the Headmaster's wife, and secures a camellia from her bosom while her husband gasps convulsively. At Oxford he rides hard to hounds, and knocks out a professional prize-fighter. Having joined the Life Guards, he sits on a great black charger, "square and steadfast as the keep of a castle." He drives a good woman to death and a bad woman to despair, and dies as a result of reckless riding. The bad woman strews his grave with exotic flowers, "not carefully arranged, but showered by a reckless, desperate hand"; and reappears in another book.

In "Sans Merci, or Kestrels and Falcons," Flora Bellasys is the principal falcon. Married to a rich, aging voluptuary, but faithful to Guy's memory, she hounds an artist to suicide; her husband curses the name of Guy Livingstone, and has a paralytic stroke. The other predatory birds of the story are a racing crook, his daughter, a superb blonde, and her lover, a gambler, who ruin a country gentleman between them. And a sly, discreet beauty appears called Mrs. Ellerslie, a military flirt, who in a later book, "Breaking a Butterfly, or Blanche Ellerslie's Ending," meets more than her match in a hero-villain.

"Sword and Gown"

The hero of "Sword and Gown" is another Guy Livingstone, but slightly less wicked and a more distinguished soldier. He also has a vast, deep chest and knotted muscles; and his voice is deep-toned and melodious, but too slow and deliberate to be quite pleasant. "The thin short lips might be very pitiless when compressed, very contemptuous and provocative when curling; but the enormous moustache, sweeping over them like a wave and ending in a clean stiff upward curve, made even this a matter of mere conjecture."

His powers of endurance are terrific. "Shikari of the Upper Himalayas, gillies of Perthshire and the Western Highlands, chamois-hunters of the Tyrol and guides of Chamonix or Courmayeur could all have told tales of that long, level stride." His handshake is overpowering. "Few, after experiencing the involuntary pressure, when he did not in the least mean to be cordial, doubted that there were passions in Royston Keene—difficult perhaps to arouse, but yet more difficult to appease or subdue." Unlucky in love, when he has "broken into his last large note," he dies in the Charge of the Light Brigade. "With a gayer laugh on his lip than it had worn for many a day, the Cool Captain led his squadron gallantly into Aceldama."

A Wicked Hero

The wickedest of all Lawrence's heroes is Mark Ramsay, who punishes Blanche Ellerslie for her flirtations. A handsome Scotsman, "there were few nooks and corners of the civilised world that were strange to him, and fewer still where some tale might not have been gathered redounding little to his credit. Wherever he went he made the same pitiless, unscrupulous use of his fair face and lissom tongue. With women, unfortunately, forewarned is not forearmed; and his evil repute seemed never to have seriously hindered the accomplishment of his desires." He showed a cold reserve on the subject of his conquests. "Few who sought to betray him into confession or confidence tried the experiment twice. This spark of chivalry and a certain generosity at play were the two bright spots relieving the darkness of Mark Ramsay's nature at thirty-five."

What more promising introduction could there be to a popular novel? When a kind bookseller in Cork allowed me to take "Blanche Ellerslie" away for nothing, with some other books that had cost money, I settled down to read it before the others. The torn title-page was inscribed in faded ink and in an elegant hand "Clarissa FitzGerald"; and I hope Clarissa enjoyed it as much as I did. The end is better than the beginning; when Mark has married and punished Blanche, one of Blanche's admirers punishes Mark's mistress by poisoning her face-cream. The mistress is a gambler's daughter; and I must admit that the pair of adventurers, father and daughter, is a favourite theme with Lawrence, who was inclined to repeat his characters. His heroes are all gamblers, because he was a gambler himself. When his publisher gave him £1,000 for a novel, he went regularly to Homburg and put it on the tables.

"Hagarene"

Another shady father and daughter are the subject of "Hagarene," which contains an excellent description of a high-class gambling hell and a gambler's progress. The adventuress-heroine also becomes acquainted with garrison life in Ireland, in a small town in the West, where a major murders a subaltern for her sake. One chapter begins: "A travelled friend of mine was asked what was the most depressing scene upon which his eyes had rested. After due consideration he answered, 'A small Irish country town, under soft Irish weather.'"

Lawrence knew something about Ireland himself, about shooting in Kerry and Clare and Galway, and hard riding with the Galway Blazers. His wife was one of the Kirwans of Cregg, a family famous for their good looks; and his brother was stationed in Ireland and killed in a steeplechase near Dublin. In "Guy Livingstone" there is a violent story of agrarian troubles in the West; but it is no more highly-coloured than the rest of the book—and all the other books.

Lawrence wrote for money; he wrote what the public wanted; he exaggerated; he repeated his themes; he sometimes let his sub-plots get out of hand, in the manner of his time. But he wrote like a gentleman; and he was never dull.

ON THE SEA WALL

By CECIL DAY LEWIS

ὡς γὰρ ἐς σ᾽ ἴδω βρόχε᾽ ὥς με φώναις
οὐδ᾽ ἒν ἔτ᾽ εἴκει . . . .

AS I came to the sea-wall that August day,
One out of all the bathers there
Beckoned my eye, a girl at play
With the surf-flowers. Was it the dark, dark hair
Falling Egyptian-wise, or the way
Her body curved to the spray?—

I know not. Only my heart was shaking
Within me, and then it stopped; as though
You were dead and your shape had returned to haunt me
On the very same spot where, five years ago,
You slipped from my arms and played in the breaking
Surges to tease and enchant me.

I could not call out. Had there been no more
Than those thickets of rusty wire to pen us
Apart, I'd have gone to that girl by the shore
Hoping she might be you. But between us
Lie tangled, severing, stronger far,
The barbed relics of love's old war.

Some New Novels

The Seed Was Kind. By Dorothy Macardle. Peter Davies. 8/6 net.

AGAINST a background of Geneva in 1938, the fall of France and the air raids on London in 1940, Miss Macardle tells the story of how war and rumours of war affected the lives of several young Europeans of different nationalities. "The Seed Was Kind" makes interesting reading, but leaves the reader with a vague feeling of dissatisfaction, with the feeling that something has been attempted, but not done.

Miss Macardle has considerable talent in chronicling recent history, but she has not yet learnt to assimilate that material into the background of a novel, to reveal, as was her intention, the interaction of character and war. The characters in this novel are again and again shown suffering agonising hardships; but they fail to evoke compassion, probably because they are not people, but pegs on which Miss Macardle has hung a nationality, a cause, or a gift of genius. And yet, in spite of all this, the mood of these characters is conveyed by the author's honest effort in such a way as to compensate for other discrepancies. "The Seed was Kind" is an entertaining novel, which just falls short of the high standard at which it aims.

Golden Rose. By Pamela Hinkson. Collins. 9/6 net.

Any writer who takes India as the scene or background for a novel almost automatically invites comparison with Mr. E. M. Forster. The comparison is an exacting one; few can survive and claim to have brought the reader to greater understanding of a complex and mysterious country.

Miss Hinkson is certainly not one of the few. From "Golden Rose" one would gather that India is a large, hot country, where most of the inhabitants are ignorant and very poor, and where Western missionaries lead noble lives of self-sacrifice—nothing more. None of the characters is Indian, and none of the Western characters shows any trace of the influence of the Indian environment, apparently introduced for its cinematic appeal. Both Miss Hinkson and her publishers claim that "Golden Rose" contains deep psychological and philosophical penetration. The reader sees little more than a rather tedious love-story unfolded against an Eastern back-cloth.

Sunrise to Sunset. By Adrian Bell. The Bodley Head. 7/6 net.

This is the story of a family among the hills of Westmorland, where farming is inseparably bound up with family life, and where, largely owing to inaccessibility, modern machines are few and the flail is still a common implement of husbandry. The story opens in 1940, with the threat of invasion of England, which causes the author to send his family away from their menaced East Anglian farm to a cottage among the hills of Westmorland. As the story unfolds many interesting contrasts are brought to notice between farming conditions in the Westmorland Fell and in Suffolk

Farewell to Tharrus. By Catherine MacDonald Maclean. Collins: 7/6 net.

In "Farewell to Tharrus" Catherine MacDonald Maclean, whose "Seven for Cordelia" was described as "a wild flower among books" by one critic, continues the story of Donald and Cordelia Kinross and their trio of evacuees. Her lively style and deep understanding of nature make this simple story of life on a beautiful Highland farm well worth reading—if you like stories about life on beautiful Highland farms.

Detective Stories

By Austin Clarke

"THE detective story is the normal recreation of noble minds," declares Mr. Philip Guedalla, and the lofty tone of his sentence flatters the attentive ear. But the remark in itself is notable. Owing to the curious nature of the human mind, successful writers of commercial fiction are rarely satisfied with their popularity and their enormous sales. They long for less substantial honours. I have met wealthy serial writers of the elder generation who believed that they were inspired by philanthropic motives. Invariably they have confessed with a sanctimonious sigh that their humble efforts brought a little happiness into the world and helped to alleviate the hard lot of simple folk. But to-day the commercial novelist has become more ambitious and is determined to establish his own literary importance by the simple device of flattering the great public. This is especially noticeable in the extremely lucrative trade of detective story writing. Authors of detective stories are specialists, and must have a high degree of skill, but they are no longer contented with our admiration for their ingenuity and power of invention.

Poe the Pioneer

I have been reading with astonishment a lengthy preface which Miss Dorothy L. Sayers contributed some years ago to a huge compilation of detective stories. It is cleverly written, informative, and flatters in magnificent fashion the general public. The lover of detective yarns is left with the impression that his reading is an exercise in good citizenship, an intellectual discipline and a continual artistic experience.

The form of the modern detective story was first discovered by the American poet, Edgar Allan Poe, and in his stories, as Miss Sayers points out, the general principles of this type of fiction were laid down for ever. Unfortunately, this wayward man of genius did not persevere in his discoveries. "Poe, like a restless child, played with his new toy for a little while, and then, for some reason, wearied of it." That gentle sentence shows Miss Sayers's solicitude for her readers. She evidently believes that those who enjoy the gruesome pleasures of imaginary murders and foul play must be spared unpleasant facts. She does not mention, therefore, that Poe was paid only a few miserable dollars for his famous stories, and spent most of his life in an appalling state of destitution.

North and South

Miss Sayers traces the later development of the detective story, rather surprisingly, to another American author, Fenimore Cooper. The Red Indian patiently tracking down his quarry by footprints, tell-tale twig or fallen leaf was the predecessor of the modern sleuth. In the 'sixties the generation which had read Cooper began to trace the "spoor" of the criminal upon its own native heath. But readers who might be nervous of hatchet or war-whoop are quickly reassured by handcuff and police whistle.

> The full blossoming of the detective-stories is found among the Anglo-Saxon races. It is notorious that an English crowd tends to side with the policeman in a row. The British legal code, with its tradition of "sportsmanship" and "fair play for the criminal," is particularly favourable to the production of detective fiction, allowing, as it does, sufficient rope to the quarry to provide a ding-dong chase, rich in up-and-down incident.

But this pleasurable exercise in good citizenship is as yet reserved only for superior races:

> In the Southern States of Europe the law is less loved and the detective story less frequent. We may not unreasonably trace a connection here.

The essay positively glows with terms of poetic praise. We are told to examine the best detective stories for "their beauty of form and structure," their "glittering mechanism," their "Aristotelian perfection of beginning, middle and end." They have, Miss Sayers exclaims, the rounded perfection of a triolet. Having read this essay, I shall find it hard in future not to gaze with awe and reverence at the rows of detective fiction in our sweet-shops and twopenny libraries.

The "Penny Dreadful"

Even the penny dreadfuls, devoured by schoolboys, do not escape the poetic enthusiasm of Miss Sayers. The stories of Sexton Blake, carried on in turn by successive writers, would, she tells us, richly repay scientific investigation. "They represent the nearest modern approach to a national folklore, conceived as a centre for a cycle of loosely connected romances in the Arthurian manner." I have spent many a pleasant evening in London with some of these writers of the Sexton Blake cycle, and I think they would be very much surprised to learn that they were the lineal descendants of Chrétien de Troyes and Geoffrey of Monmouth.

Successful novelists usually respect the sales of their rivals and rarely indulge in adverse criticism of their products. Miss Sayers bestows compliments on all the successful detective story writers of her time. But she does not seem to approve of Chesterton's innovation in giving detective stories a slightly religious flavour. Miss Sayers herself writes religious plays in blank verse, but I am told that she avoids religious doctrine in her own detective stories. I will not venture, however, to make any comment on this question, for in this country the fame of G. K. Chesterton seems to be beyond the range of literary enquiry! My incidental criticism of that popular English humorist in this paper some weeks ago has evoked a solemn front page article in the Irish Catholic, under the alarmed heading, "An Attempt to Debunk G. K. Chesterton."

Henceforward

Towards the close of this essay Miss Sayers discusses the future of the detective story, and writes: "There certainly does seem a possibility that the detective-story will some time come to an end, simply because the public will have learnt all the tricks." That seems to me a damaging admission, and surely weakens her main argument. The conjuror is in a happier position, for he has not to reveal his tricks at the end of the performance. The public is content to remain mystified.

"T.B."—A CONTRAST

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES

SIR,—Like many tuberculosis patients, I have been waiting anxiously to hear if our Government is going to adopt any measure on the lines of that introduced in Great Britain and Northern Ireland to help the dependents of tuberculosis victims. My own case is typical of many. I was diagnosed fifteen months ago as suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis, and had to stop work. In the three months while I was awaiting admission to a sanatorium my wife, my five children and myself had to exist on a grant of 23s. per week from the Public Assistance, plus vouchers under the Tuberculosis Scheme, which provided me with one egg and a half-pint of milk daily and a half-pound of butter weekly, plus vouchers under an emergency relief scheme, which gave us food to the value of about 9s. per week. During this time I slept in one of the rooms of our two-room apartment, and my wife and the five children slept in the other. My doctor told me to see that we all got plenty of nourishing food!

When I was admitted to the sanatorium, where I am at present, our Public Assistance grant was reduced by 2s., and the vouchers given to us under the tuberculosis scheme were withdrawn. The Children's Allowances scheme brought some improvement, as all my children are under ten, and we qualified for a grant of 7s. 6d. weekly. But on visiting home last week my wife told me that, because of the Children's Allowances, our Public Assistance grant had been cut again by 2s. 6d.

At present I am very well fed and comfortably lodged in a sanatorium, but how could a patient have the peace of mind necessary for recovery when he thinks of his wife trying to feed, clothe and pay rent for six people on 26s. a week plus a few vouchers? How could childred fed on this allowance be expected to build up resistance against tuberculosis and other diseases? If I were living in Northern Ireland my family would receive 54s. per week under the new scheme, plus rent, plus 3s. 6d. weekly for fuel, plus whatever instalments were due on hire purchase agreements and life insurance policies. I would ask deputies of all parties and people who are outside politics to take up this matter urgently.—Yours, etc.,

"M. H."

Co. Wicklow,
September 15th, 1944.

"TOURIST MYSTERIES"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES

SIR,—The D.U.T. Company's public relations officer has done well to let the public know exactly what has been, or is likely to be, done to provide shelter for the Company's bus passengers. Eight diminutive structures placed in the suburbs during eighteen months—and six more to follow! Not a single shelter in central city areas. And now we are told that the Company's agreement with the Corporation has been more than fully observed.

Such performances, surely, are reminiscent of the proverbial mountain and mouse.—Yours, etc.,

"VIATOR."

Dublin, September 15th, 1944.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES

SIR,—Mr. Luke's letter hardly does him credit. He tells us that 14 (fourteen) shelters have been obtained "or slightly more than the quota fixed by the authorities."

May we be informed how many people could obtain shelter in 14 of these contraptions, and how many passengers, at the rush hour, need shelter in bad weather? The so-called authorities should be named, and given all the publicity they deserve for their public-spirited action.—Yours, etc.,

"X."

PROTECTION OF HORSES

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—The International League for the Protection of Horses most gratefully acknowledge the following subscriptions, which have been received since the last list was published in the Irish Times.

The horses we are now buying are among the most wretched we have yet had to deal with; they are old, emaciated, stiff and weak, yet they are shod for work and marked by harness pressure. Bad as they are, the tinkers and gipsy-dealers are most anxious to buy them, and, but for the International League, practically all these old, low-priced animals would fall into their ruthless hands.

The busiest months of the year are now upon us, when the harvest work is over, scores of good old horses that have given of their utmost to meet the strain of the past five years will be thrown upon the market to be sold for whatever they will fetch. This is an opportunity for all those who love, or ever have loved, a horse to save those poor old, helpless animals from the last, and worst, cruelty, of being sold to the tinkers to suffer ill-treatment, exposure and semi-starvation for the rest of their lives.

If we are a "nation of horse-lovers," which many people doubt, who see our horses in their feeble, pitiful old age, no one questions the fact that we owe more to our horses than any other country in the world, and are remarkably slow in seeking to repay that debt.—Yours, etc.,

ELEANOR C. WHITTON,
Honorary Secretary.

£3,000,000 WORDS

SOME years ago the American makers of Royal Baking Powder sold the business. For the factories and plants they got two million dollars. For the name "Royal Baking Powder," and the goodwill attached to it, they got sixteen million dollars—more than £3,000,000.

What gives trade mark names like this such tremendous value? Clearly not the words themselves. The value lies entirely in what the words stand for in the public mind. They are worth fortunes because the public has been educated to believe in, to buy, and to keep on buying the products for which the names stand.

Given a good article, experience has proved conclusively that the quickest and most economical way to create goodwill is by advertising But it must be sound, well planned advertising, and it must be sustained.

We have helped, and are helping, to build up goodwill in this way for many products and firms. Why not for you?

THE CHURCH OF IRELAND

FROM OUR CHURCH OF IRELAND CORRESPONDENT

A COURSE of study by correspondence is carried on by the Sunday School Society for Ireland, dealing with the Bible; the Church of Ireland, and the Way of Teaching. The main purpose of this course, and of the Notes issued in connection therewith, is to help members of the Church of Ireland to understand its doctrine, and to increase their usefulness, particularly in the home and parish.

ORDINATIONS

The Bishop of Derry ordained, and licensed for their respective assistant curacies, the Rev. Alwyn Maconachie (Christ Church, Londonderry), and the Rev. G. C. Willoughby (Letterkenny).

The Archbishop of Dublin will hold an Ordination in Clontarf Parish Church on Sunday, October 15th, when Mr. R. W. M. Wynne, who has been nominated for the assistant curacy of Clontarf parish, will be made a Deacon.

Plans have been made for holding a conference of the youth of the parishes of Booterstown, Carysfort, All Saints', Blackrock; Stillorgan and Dundrum, in the Monk Gibbon Memorial Hall, Mount Merrion, on November 7th, 8th and 9th. The general title of the course of lectures is "The Church of Ireland," and lectures will be given on "Its Membership" (the Rev. E. G. Daunt, Rector of Balbriggan); "Its Organisation" (the Rev. W. W. L. Rooke, curate-Assistant of Bray); "Its Message" (Professor W. B. Stanford, F.T.C.D.).

The Secretaries of the Youth Conference of Down and Connor and Dromore have arranged a Conference to take place from September 17th to 24th.

The Bishop of Kilmore recently instituted the Rev. E. M. Griffin, formerly Rector of Omey (Clifden), to the benefice of Annagh, Quivvy and St. Andrew's, in Belturbet Parish Church. The Rev. G. B. Fairbrother, Rector of Desertserges Parish, Enniskean (Cork), has been nominated to the incumbency of Omey. The Rev. A. E. Gray, Incumbent of Castlelyons (Cork), has been appointed to the Incumbency of Corkbeg, rendered vacant by the retirement of the Rev. R. G. Darley.

The Bishop of Ossory recently instituted the Rev. W. J. Whittaker to the Incumbency of Hacketstown and Clonmore, rendered vacant through the retirement of the Rev. Chancellor C. S. S. Ellison. Mr. Whittaker, who was ordained in 1936, has been for the last two years curate-in-charge of Timahoe, Luggacurran and Timogue (Leighlin). The Rev. T. E. Harris, Curate-Assistant, Offerlane, has been instituted by the Bishop of Ossory to the Union of Monart and Templescobin.

The Parish of Killylea (Armagh) will shortly become vacant owing to the resignation of the Rev. R. E. Dennis, who has been appointed Rector of St. Peter's Parish, Cork. Mr. Dennis, who was ordained in 1935, has served in the parishes of St. Patrick's, Ballymacarrett; St. Mary's, Newry, and Termonmaguirke. The Rev. R. E. M. Benson, curate-in-charge of Garvary, has been appointed Rector of Donagh (Glaslough), Co. Monaghan. The Rev. W. W. Nash, curate-in-charge of Cooneen, has been appointed curate-in-charge of Drummully, Clones.

ABSENT FRIENDS

According to the latest reports from Quebec, the talks between President Roosevelt and Mr. Winston Churchill have made such rapid progress that the conference is expected to come to an end during the next few days. Of course, in the absence of Marshal Stalin, the scope of the conversations has been limited. Yet much ground seems to have been covered. In the nature of things, the subjects under discussion have been confined largely to matters concerning the Anglo-Saxon war effort in the Pacific as well as in Europe. Mr. Mackenzie King, the Canadian Premier, has had several talks with the two principals, and, during the last few days, both Australia and New Zealand have been represented directly at the conference. Mr. Anthony Eden, the British Foreign Minister, also has arrived in Quebec. Before his arrival, nearly all the persons who took part in the conversations, with the exception of Messrs. Roosevelt and Churchill, were experts in one or other of the fighting services; but Mr. Eden's participation indicates that political issues also are being discussed. What precisely those issues are, it is impossible to say, although, naturally, rumour is extremely busy. Most of the gossip hinges on Marshal Stalin's rather blunt refusal to take part in the conference, and it is being suggested that Mr. Eden may go now to Moscow in order to establish renewed contact with the Russian leader. It will be remembered that, more than a year ago, a tentative arrangement had been made whereby Marshal Stalin would meet the American and British leaders at Fairbanks, in Alaska; but then, as now, he found himself unable to attend, with the result that the venue was changed to Teheran, where the three statesmen had such a successful meeting. Possibly, the Russian Marshal will see his way to meet his two Anglo-Saxon colleagues somewhere else at a later date. In the meantime, few decisions of any binding force can be taken in his absence. Bulletins from Quebec indicate that one of the problems under review relates to the terms upon which an armistice might be granted to either Germany or Japan. The Governments of Great Britain and the United States have been committed up to the present by the declaration made at Casablanca by Messrs. Roosevelt and Churchill that nothing short of "unconditional surrender" would satisfy them. Now that the war is being waged on Germany's doorstep—as we write, Allied troops are surrounding Aachen, and are fighting on a front of some seventy miles in length inside German territory—the time has come, as it had not come at Casablanca, when the question of an armistice is entering the sphere of practical politics. Dr. Goebbels, and various other German leaders, have declared that Germany will fight on to her last man. The conduct and demeanour of the Wehrmacht's garrisons in the several French ports which they continue to occupy afford evidence of an almost fanatical resolve to fight a war à outrance. So far, there has been no suggestion of a negotiated peace of any kind.

Manifestly, no decision regarding possible armistice terms can be reached without Russia's positive consent. There is no doubt at all that differences of opinion exist between Moscow on the one hand, and London and Washington on the other. One of them relates to the problem of Poland. Hitherto, Russia has been quite uncompromising in this matter. The Warsaw tragedy affords a ghastly example of the lack of cohesion in Allied policy; and things have been worsened during the last few days by the appointment in Lublin of a "President of the Polish Republic." Evidently the Polish Committee at Lublin, which is working directly under the ægis of the Russian Government, continues to be at loggerheads with the Polish Government in London. This unhappy condition of affairs hardly can be remedied until there shall have been a heart-to-heart talk between Marshal Stalin and his British and American colleagues. Another problem that demands co-operation by the Russians is that of the post-war organisation, so to speak, of world peace. The delegates who met recently at Dumbarton Oaks have made certain proposals which already have been discussed by President Roosevelt with some of the leaders of political opinion in the United States. These proposals, while, in the nature of things, rather vague in their outline, are believed to adumbrate an international body, differing in few essentials from that League of Nations which emerged from the Treaty of Versailles. Apparently, the idea is that there shall be an international League of a like kind, on which all peace-loving States shall be represented; but the Dumbarton Oaks experts have recommended that the real power shall be vested in the "Big Four"—namely, Great Britain, the United States, Russia and China. So far, no provision seems to have been made for the adherence of Germany and Japan, although one of the reasons for the now admitted failure of President Wilson's League to maintain world peace was the fact that in its early stages it was not truly representative of all the Powers. Here again, little can be done without the support of the Russians. The unknown factor in all these provisional equations concerning the future peace and constructive organisation of the civilised world is Moscow. Marshal Stalin is a man of many parts; but, possibly, his most notable characteristic is his ability to keep his own counsel. He never has committed himself in any way. He has maintained a reasonably close liaison with the British and Americans in all matters bearing directly upon the military conduct of the war in Europe; but the mere fact that Russia continues to remain at peace with Japan speaks for itself. At the moment, the Russian Army is mounting another big offensive against the Germans. In point of fact, something that was almost incredible three months ago has happened: the Western Allies have crossed the German border in advance of the Russians. Pending the result of Russia's new offensive, the outside world only can possess its soul in patience.

The Home Product

"The roast beef of old England"—that, romantically, was the theme of an address which was delivered this week by Mr. Geoffrey Lloyd, chairman of the British Oil Control Board. Mr. Lloyd looked first to the past, maintaining that many of the British people's sterling qualities had been built upon home-grown food. Looking to the future, he urged that the lesson should be applied—in other words, that the country should consume as much freshly-grown food as possible after the war. This recommendation deserves notice; for it is a complete reversal of the British pre-war policy, under which meat from the Antipodes and the Argentine was permitted to drive the domestic farmer almost out of business. Mr. Lloyd, like many other leaders of his country, has learned things from the war. It has been demonstrated, inter alia, that a carefully balanced diet, based upon fresh natural produce, is necessary to town-dwellers. The people of Great Britain have been compelled by the rationing regulations to eat less than they ate of yore; but records indicate that, while eating less, they have been eating to better effect, and that, in general, their health is better than it used to be. "Insufficient importance," said Mr. Lloyd, had been "attached to the bad features of the diet that had become normal in the large cities" since the Industrial Revolution. In future they will eat with greater care, and with proper attention to the genuine values of the various foods. This is a lesson which might be adopted in Ireland, as well as in England. Living is simpler, indeed, on this side of the Channel, and "natural" foods are, upon the whole, more widely prevalent; yet, in regard to healthy eating, our nation still has much to learn. The housewife retains a tendency to buy the wrong and costly, instead of the wholesome and comparatively inexpensive, foods, because she is reluctant to face the trouble of preparing good food in the proper fashion. Continental Europe fares more healthily than ourselves upon inferior foodstuffs. What could Ireland not make of the splendid materials ready to her hand?

OBITUARY

MR. K. MAWHINNEY

The death has occurred in a Dublin nursing home of Mr. Kenneth Mawhinney, chairman and managing director of Stephenson and Co., Ltd., hosiery manufacturers, Balbriggan and Newtownards. Mr. Mawhinney joined the firm in Newtownards at an early age, and by his industry and enterprise worked his way to the top. When the firm's activities were extended to the South, Mr. Mawhinney was given the job of building up the business, which he did very successfully.

MR. S. H. WATERHOUSE

The death was announced at his residence, Claremont, Killiney, Co. Dublin, of Mr. Samuel H. Waterhouse, proprietor of the jewellery firm of that name in Dame street, Dublin. He was educated at Chesterfield, Parsonstown; at Arlington, Portarlington, and at Foyle College, Derry. He entered his grandfather's business at the age of 19, and in 1903 took over the ownership of the firm. He was a Master of the Goldsmiths' Corporation two years ago, and was very well known in business and sporting circles in the city. He supplied a great number of cups for important greyhound races and point-to-point meetings. A popular sportsman, Mr. Waterhouse was a member of the Dublin Rowing Club since its inception in 1907, and was for 15 years a vice-president, up to the club's lapse early this year. He was also captain of the Killiney Golf Club in 1913 and 1915. Mr. Waterhouse leaves a widow and two daughters.

INTERMEDIATE RESULTS

To facilitate secondary school executives in the formation of new classes for the coming term, the Department of Education has compiled full lists of Intermediate Certificate examination results and forwarded them to the 440 schools from which pupils were entered. The boys' schools received their lists about a fortnight ago; those for the girls' schools were posted on Thursday. As the elaborate system of checking, to which the official lists are subjected annually, has not yet been completed, the results available to date are merely provisional. The official tabulation sheets on which candidates' marks are entered are expected to be ready for the printers within the next few weeks, and the official results published towards the end of October.

Cruiskeen Lawn

By Myles na gCopaleen

MR. NICHEVO, the writer on my left (your right) is continually saying things that are at once puzzling and hurtful. He is the strangest man in the ephemeral world of journalism. (I say nothing of the diurnal world of ephemeralism). For example, heavens knows what he has to-day but the other Saturday he had a paragraph headed CHAOS ON THE QUAYS. Efficient, if you like —quite good, in fact. But such waste! Why not simply QUAYOS? (Nobody ever asks my advice until it's too late). He continues:

"In one of the queues I espied the forlorn figure of my friend Seán O Faoláin, Editor of the Bell, and one of our foremost literary men . . . ."

How odd that Mr. O Faoláin was located merely in . . . . one of these queues! And why . . . . why am I not mentioned in that sentence. Am I . . . . nobody? Surely if one is writing of literary men, in common manners one should mention the name of the greatest one of all?

And imagine getting the words "folorn"—not to say "Faoláin"—and "Bell" into one sentence! The damn literary . . . . Keatness, sorry, cuteness, of it!

Bus Shelters

Talking of queues and queuetness, the Dublin Transports (stet) Company had a letter just under here just under my feet yesterday about shelters. I dissent from the contents of the letter.

"The fact is," the letter says, "that immediately Dublin Corporation agreed to take over and maintain bus shelters, the company set about buying and erecting them. Orders were placed for shelters in steel and glass . . . . Since then, in eighteen months, the company has obtained fourteen shelters, or slightly more than the quota fixed by the authorities in relation to the steel components . . . ."

I say that the Dublin Corporation have been gravely blameworthy if they have in fact agreed to take over and maintain structures ancillary to the operation of a profit-taking transport concern. This will not only relieve the company of the duty of painting and repairing these structures of which there may be hundreds, but also of paying rates in respect of them. Will they also take over that other shelter, Amiens Street Station?

Only a few shelters have been erected so far because, forsooth, the steel has not been forthcoming from abroad. The importation of this quantity of steel is unimportant in itself but the bland statement quoted is a fair measure of this company's vicious xenomania. Architects and even joiners will join me in saying that there is no reason in the world why far better and more pleasing shelters could be devised by natives and made out of native materials.

Another Thing

The Dublin Transport Company's policy of substituting buses for trams is a matter of the gravest import to all citizens. It is true that before the war the E.S.B. produced—inexcusably, as we know—much of its current from coal. Signs are not wanting that they will not be permitted to continue this game. The chassis of trams had to be imported but the construction of the vehicles maintained an important coach-building industry. Tram-transport after the war would mean that only essential machinery and rails would be imported. Fifty per cent. of the vehicle and all the fuel would be produced at home. With bus transport, the entire vehicle and all the fuel will be imported, resulting in the permanent and continued expatriation of possibly 70% of the money handled annually. Or to state the proposition more vividly, the Dublin Transport Company will be merely a corporate tax-gatherer for steel, transportation and oil concerns located at the ends of the earth.

Many grand things are promised in the post-war world. Many of those baubles will have to be imported. Motor-cars cocaine and tea will never be indigenous. Why add to a list already dangerously long this further item of municipal transport? Because a bus-operator makes more dough than a tram-operator?

If buses are to be preferred to trams, even at the cost of the economic disruption mentioned, then let it be said. But said by the customers.

Courteous transport chiefs

Solicitous for the Irishry.

ANTHONY KEOGH-NOLAN

AN APPRECIATION

In a world where self-esteem and the desire for publicity are all too prevalent, Anthony Keogh-Nolan carried things to the other extreme. He had a perfect genius for self-effacement. His concern was to get things done. Others were more than welcome to the limelight. A master of understatement, his performance always exceeded his promise. Gifted with unusual powers of imagination, he abhorred anything in the nature of kite-flying. His knowledge of law and accountancy was wide, and, above all else, accurate. His sense of humour ensured a sense of proportion. As a raconteur—especially of public and personal events in Dublin—he had few rivals. A generous minded and loyal friend, his cool judgment was valued by a wide circle of business and personal acquaintances. Now the trouble is to discover others who are competent and willing to fill the vacancies that have been created by the passing of a many-sided and richly-gifted friend and citizen.

AN IRISHMAN'S DIARY

"Barney" McGuckin

IT has been a sad week for me, for it began with the death of my very old friend Basil McGuckin. He and I entered Trinity College on the same day, one bleak morning in October, 1911. From that moment on we became fast friends. We had the same tutor, and though our academic lives lay widely apart, we managed to see a great deal of each other during our student days.

To us in college, McGuckin was always "Barney." I do not know why, unless the pet-name was some kind of corruption of Barton—that McGuckin who made a name for himself as a singer.

Basil McGuckin took up the law, becoming one of the few really shining lights at the Irish Bar. He practised for a while in Belfast, being himself a Northerner from Magherafelt. He also became a Nationalist member of the British House of Commons for a Derry constituency, but never took his seat at Westminster. He married Miss Alice Freeman, sister of the well-known Dublin physician, and spent his honeymoon in Germany, where I happened to run into him and his wife, at the height of the inflation period.

From Belfast to Dublin

He did not stay very long in the north, for his heart was in Dublin. When he came south he quickly built up a big business at the Bar, specialising in criminal work. Not for many years has there been a more brilliant advocate at Green street than "Barney" McGuckin, who was at his best when fighting an apparently hopeless case before a jury. He was not a great orator. He had not the biting tongue of a Tim Healy, or the caustic genius of a James Campbell; but he had a wonderful way with a jury, and a charm of manner that won him many a verdict.

He also was an excellent lawyer. Many successful advocates do not bother much about the law; but McGuckin took pains to school himself thoroughly, thereby gaining the respect, as well as the admiration, of all his colleagues in the Law Library. His death at a comparatively early age is a big loss to the Irish Bar.

A Trinity Memory

Mr. John Fraser, the veteran Fellow of Trinity College, who now is a distinguished and revered member of the Board, will enjoy the following little anecdote relating to "Barney" McGuckin, and incidentally, to myself.

It happened nearly thirty years ago. "Barney" and I had not particularly good reputations in Trinity. Both of us had been known to climb the railings, at times, and neither of us was popular with the porters—to say nothing of the Junior Dean, who in those days was none other than the redoubtable John Fraser.

One Trinity Monday, "Barney" and I, who had been carpeted before the "J.D." some little time previously, decided that, on this occasion, discretion would be the better part of valour, and that, for once, we ought to keep out of mischief. In those far-off days things were apt to happen in Trinity College of a Trinity Monday night.

A Quiet Night

The pair of us, after Commons, went off quietly to the theatre. I think it was the Empire (now the Olympia), where you could get an excellent seat for ninepence. We did not even have a bottle of stout that evening; so far as I can remember, neither of us had enough money.

After the show we sauntered back to College. I can well remember "Barney" striding down Dame street in a straw hat. When we arrived at the Front Gate all was well, although in the distance we could hear sounds of revelry by night, and we guessed that something was afoot in the Bay, where "Barney" lived. My rooms were in the Front Square, so we repaired thither for a cup of tea.

After about an hour, I strolled across with "Barney" towards his rooms, and when we entered the Bay we found it strangely deserted—except for one astonishing figure.

We had a common friend, one "Jimmy" Elliott (his real name was Cecil), who had flaming red hair, and came from Portora, where he had played on one of the famous Rugby teams. Poor "Jimmy," who was killed afterwards in France, had been looking upon the wine when it was red that evening, and apparently had fallen asleep in one of those large aluminium wheel-barrows which are used by the workmen about the College.

In the Bay

As usual, there had been a big bonfire in the Bay, most of the fuel for which had been removed from the bannisters of the students' houses. While the fire was blazing a party of gay spirits, headed, I think, by one Harold Price (if I am wrong I hope that Harold will forgive me), thought it would be a good idea to place the recumbent form of "Jimmy" Elliott in the middle of it, which they proceeded to do.

At this moment two things happened. A couple of porters entered the Bay from the printing-house, and "Barney" McGuckin and I came round the corner of the dining-hall. The advent of the porters, unknown to us, caused an immediate scurry, and when McGuckin and I arrived all that we saw was the wheel-barrow with its precious burden, enveloped by a mass of glowing embers. We immediately rushed forward to save the unhappy "Jimmy" from premature cremation. But just as we were congratulating ourselves on our heroic action, the two porters pounced upon us. They were determined to find some scapegoats, and took our names.

On the Mat

Next morning we were haled before the Junior Dean, who informed us politely, but with a certain amount of that firmness for which John Fraser is justly renowned, that the College of the Holy and Undivided Trinity would flourish more happily if one of us should find accommodation elsewhere. In other words, we lost our rooms.

Even then "Barney's" legal mind found a way out. We happened to be entirely innocent, although we found it extremely difficult to get anybody to believe us. But our tutor, the late E. J. Gwynn, having been fully briefed by "Barney," donned his tall hat—in those days a tutor always wore a "topper" when he paid an official visit to the Provost—and, accompanied by us, paid a call on the rather awesome presence of the late "Tony" Traill. The porters had sworn hard that we were guilty, but, happily for us, our tutor's arguments won the day, and we left the Provost's house without—a stain on our characters.

Bus Manners

I admit that a lot of nonsense is talked about the evils of the rising generation and the difference between the present times and those of our own childhood. Nothing could be easier and nothing more futile than to be laudator temporis acti; but there are times when I feel that the grousers have a lot of right on their side.

Take the question of bus manners. I happen to travel daily in a bus which carries a large number of school children, some of them wearing the caps of well-known and expensive educational establishments. Time and again I have noticed the remarkable lack of good manners shown by these young people.

Autres Mœurs

I was strap-hanging myself yesterday in a bus that was packed with these children. The great majority was composed of boys, who did not show the slightest effort to give up their seats to any of the standing adults. I was all the more surprised and gratified, therefore, when an extremely pretty little girl of about ten years of age caught my eye and asked me to sit down. Needless to say I did not take advantage of her offer.

A couple of weeks ago, in the same bus, two rather languid looking youths who were wearing extremely "posh" school ties were in the cross seat opposite the door when two old ladies entered. One of the boys made a move, but two little girls who were sitting in the seat at right angles to them immediately stood up and made the old ladies sit down.

When I was a boy two things would have happened in these circumstances. Somebody would have given me a smack across the ear for my cubbish behaviour, and I should have been so ashamed when I saw the girls standing up that I would have felt myself in dire disgrace.

GRECIAN VICTORY FOR 'CHASE AT BALDOYLE

THERE is plenty of variety about to-day's Baldoyle programme, and backers are set more than one problem to solve. The Raheny 'Chase bears a particularly open appearance, with such as Whelan, a costly disappointment at Leopardstown last month; Knight's Crest, Funny and Kai Lung among the contenders. The obvious choice is Whelan, but a greater preference is for Grecian Victory on the strength of his good display in the Galway Plate.

Lorella won well enough last Saturday to suggest that she may follow up her win by taking the Stewards' Handicap; while of the fourteen declared for the Kilbarrack Handicap, Father Tracey makes most appeal in what should be a good betting race.

Tote Double on Fourth and Sixth Races

Great Sacrifice has been beaten since winning the "Rockinghams," and is weighted up to his best form in the Mooresfort Handicap, which may go to one of the light-weight division in Spick and Span.

MUINTIR NA TIRE HANDBOOK

The Muintir na Tire Handbook (1944), with its articles, photographs and illustrations, gives an accurate cross-sectional view of rural life in Ireland. Such subjects as "Ley Farming," "The Limitations of Our Agricultural System," "Let's Have Done with T.B.," are discussed by Professor M. F. Gorman, Dr. F. P. Beddy and Dr. E. O'Hogan, who can write with authority.

The Handbook, however, is not confined to scientific, agricultural and social topics; it also contains light reading and an article on the subject of "Films: the Present and the Future." Other articles are: "The Co-operative Movement of Ireland," "Is Scientific Farming Played Out?" and "Organising Agriculture in Portugal."

The Handbook, which is published by the Parkside Press, Ltd., should have a wide circulation, and not just in farming communities.

SUNDAY SCHOOL FESTIVAL

The annual Festival Service in connection with the Sunday School Society is to be held to-morrow in Christ Church Cathedral at 3.30 o'clock. A special form of Service has been prepared, and special music arranged. The address is to be given by the Rev. H. G. Forde, M.A., Rector of Monkstown Parish. Boys and girls and teachers are invited to the Service.

News In Brief

Commandant Retires.—Commandant Hubert Macken has retired from the Army as from September 12th.

Postmaster's Appointment.—Mr. J. McAuley, for 28 years a member of the staff of Kilkenny Post Office, has been promoted Postmaster at New Ross, Co. Wexford.

Onions Stolen from Plots.—Three youths were each ordered to pay £2 7s. 0d. as fines and compensation for stealing onions from a plot in Bray at Bray Children's Court yesterday.

Banking Appointment.—On retirement, after 45 years' service, Mr. S. Wilson, manager, Ulster Bank, Ltd., Carrickmacross, is being replaced by Mr. A. C. Morris, manager of the Ranelagh branch, Dublin.

Failed to Till.—At Rathfarnham, yesterday, Peter Murphy, Glassamucky, Tallaght, was fined £5, with £1 1s. 0d. costs, for failing to till 4½ acres of land on his holding of 17 acres. It was proved that he only tilled 1½ acres.

Licences Transferred.—At Rathfarnham yesterday, District Justice Reddin granted the transfer of a publican's licence at Firhouse to Mrs. Margaret Nolan from Mr. James Conlon. Miss Kathleen Delaney, Firhouse, was granted a transfer of the licence formerly held by her father.

Drove Off After Accident.—For driving off after his motor-car had seriously injured a cyclist outside the town, Thomas Fitzpatrick, Coronation row, Clonmel, was fined £5, and £5 expenses. The defendant said that he stopped, propped the injured man against a ditch, and then drove away.

Why Dun Aengus Grounded.—Captain T. Tierney, Galway Harbour Master, told the Harbour Board yesterday that the Galway-Aran steamer, Dun Aengus, grounded in the channel outside the docks in one of the lowest tides of the year. There were seven big stones, one standing waist high on the bottom where the grounding took place.

Heart Failure.—A verdict of death from heart failure, following a blow on the abdomen, was returned by Dr. G. P. Brennan, Co. Dublin Coroner, at an inquest held yesterday on Peter F. Gaffney (35), single, Blanchardstown, who was killed when attempting to stop a runaway horse at Castleknock. Medical evidence was to the effect that Gaffney had suffered from heart disease.

Crowd Refused to Help.—When William McDermott (34), Grenville street, was fined 40s. for assaulting a Civic Guard near Mountjoy square on August 19th, District Justice McCann, Dublin, commented on the unwillingness of Irish crowds to assist the police as compared with crowds in other countries. It appears that 200 people had gathered round when the assault took place.

Dance Hall Blacked Out.—On receiving an undertaking that £13 compensation would be paid, District Justice Flattery reserved his decision at Tobercurry, Co. Sligo, when James Durcan, Ballincurry, and Thomas Brennan, Carrowleen, pleaded guilty to causing damage to E.S.B. high tension wires. A length of wire thrown over the cables plunged a dance hall into darkness.

No Marine School for Limerick.—A letter from the Department of Industry and Commerce, submitted to the Committee of Limerick Technical Institute yesterday, stated that the Minister was not prepared, in present circumstances, to recognise the Institute as an approved school for instruction in marine training. It was decided to ask the Department to state its objections in more definite form.

Brutal Assault.—A sentence of three months' imprisonment was imposed on Joseph Lee, Back Lodge, Mental Hospital, Limerick, in Limerick District Court, yesterday, for causing bodily harm to Daniel Keane, Jail Borheen, on August 5th. Evidence was given that Lee waylaid Keane and beat him with a piece of sewer pipe. District Justice Flood described the assault as brutal.

PENSIONS FOR RAILWAY MEN

Ninety men, employed by the Great Southern Railways Co., received the first payment of their pensions yesterday under the company's new pension and medical benefits scheme.

For a payment of 1s. per week, all railmen can choose in future between a pension of £1 per week for life at retiring age (65), 30s. per week for five years and 12s. per week for life, or 37s. 6d. per week for five years, and 6s. per week thereafter. The five-year period brings them up to the qualifying age for the old age pension. The majority of them elected to take a pension of 37s. 6d. per week.

Workers aged between 20 years and 50 years next birthday, and who have qualified for the scheme, will receive £100 at retiring age, in addition to their pensions, or a whole life fully paid up policy of £125, payable on death, plus pension.

DUNDALK HORSE SHOW

Northern Ireland and Eire farmers were in keen competition in the horse classes, which were the feature at Dundalk Show yesterday. The entry was larger than usual, the show of heavy hunters being especially good.

TEA AT 18/- PER LB.

For selling tea and cigarettes in excess of the fixed price and other offences under the Emergency Regulations, Patrick White, Drangan, was fined £50 at Fethard Court, Co. Tipperary.

Fines of £3 each were imposed on five men who bought the tea from the defendant.

The bride was given away by her father, and the Rev. William Callender was best man.

Northern Rails Dull Again

THE usual week-end quietness was noticeable on the Dublin Stock Exchange yesterday, and prices moved within narrow limits. Home Rails continued dull on renewed liquidation. Irish Industrials showed little life, and changes were almost without feature. Interest in British Industrials was on a reduced scale.

Agreement Loan rose to 109, but 4½ p.c. Land Bonds gave way to 116¾, 3½ p.c. War Loan shaded off to 104 5/16, but Corporatoin issues were busier at steady levels.

Banks held up well, apart from Royals, which dropped to 131¼. There was strong buying of Guinness units, which put the price 1/- higher to 134/6.

Great Northern Rails encountered a fresh bout of selling. The Ord. eased to 24⅜ and the Pref. gave way to 40½; the Guar. was lowered to 63 and the Deb. to 83¾.

Great Southern issues held fairly steady, apart from the Ord., which lost 10/- at 55.

Alliance Gas Ord. remained steady; but in Draperies, Pim Bros. Ord. shaded off to 10/6. Dublin (S.) City Markets Ord. advanced to 101½, while Irish Sugar Pref. moved up to 27/3 and Killeen Paper Ord. to 12/6. Polikoff Ord. shed pence at 6/-.

Diamond Shares Sparkle

DIAMOND shares have again come into the limelight, and yesterday De Beers Deferred shares rose to 16¼, compared with 15¼ two days ago. The movement has been stimulated by publicity given to the continued demand for Industrial Diamonds, and the prospective re-establishment of the Antwerp cutting industry.

American advices, too, suggest that the demand for gem diamonds continues to grow, and will, it is declared on the authority of a leading U.S. expert, further expand after the war. The outlook thus painted is certainly attractive, but it must not be overlooked that the past history of the industry indicates its extremely speculative nature.

In the past two years the conditions have been much brighter, but wide fluctuations in De Beers £2 10/- Deferred shares continue to be a feature of business in the shares. Last year, for instance, they were quoted as high as 23¼. This year the highest, so far, has been 20, while they have been below 16. So far as the current year is concerned, the maintenance of the dividend of 70 p.c., paid last year, would appear to be assured. The interim payment of 30 p.c. has already been made.

The 10/- shares of Consolidated Diamond Mines of South Africa have also risen to 35/-, after having been down to 31/9. Last year they were quoted as high as 47/3. Thus, here again, the speculative nature of the shares must be emphasised. Current earnings are no doubt substantial, and, as in the case of De Beers, no doubt the year's dividend will be maintained at last year's rate of 45 p.c., the interim of 20 p.c. having already been paid.

British Rails Higher

THE London Stock Markets were reasonably bright on the last day of the week. Business was on a moderate scale, although it was again stated that the buying was of a selective type.

Home Industrials showed modest gains of from 3d. to 9d. a share, and the recovery was general throughout the list. Tobaccos, Stores and certain Lancashire Textiles came in for moderate attention. I.C.I. Ord. recovered 3d. to 37/10½ on the maintenance of the interim dividend at 3 p.c.

Several Electric Equipment issues met with support, including General Electric, which rose 1/6 to 92/-. Steel shares were also better, with a recovery in Stewarts and Lloyds Deferred shares to 52/-.

The good tone extended to Home Railway junior stocks, which were a better market than for some time past. L.M.S. Ord. moved up to 29⅝ and Great Western Ord. to 56¼.

British Funds held previous prices well, but Continental Bonds were reactionary. Argentine Rails also went to lower levels, and there was no particular movement in the Oil section.

Some of the dividend-paying Rand Gold shares came into investment demand, but the best feature in the Mining markets was improvement among Diamond issues as a result of reported big demand for gem stones on U.S.A. account. Anglo-American Trust Ord. rose to 50/7½ and De Beers Def. to 16⅝.

Costs and Taxes Take 96 p.c. of Revenue

For the eighth consecutive year Qualcast, Ltd., manufacturers of lawn mowers, etc., is making up its dividend to 30 p.c. with a final payment of 10 p.c. and a cash bonus of 10 p.c. Profits fell by £15,333 to £133,224, which the Chairman says was solely due to the lower margin of profit on which the company has been operating.

Drawing attention to the fact that this is the fourth year in which the company has been unable to make any allocation to reserves, the Chairman analyses the distribution of the revenue in the past five years as follows:—Manufacturing costs and taxation, 96.70 p.c.; shareholders (net), 2.67 p.c.; reserves, .63 p.c. These figures, he urges, are illustrative of the manner in which the livelihood of all employees and shareholders alike will be endangered unless the burden of taxation is eased.

The capital of the company is £225,750, of which £150,750 is in 5/- Ord. shares, quoted at 36 ex-div.

A similar point is made by the Chairman of Vaughan Brothers (Drop Forgings), Ltd., which is again making up its dividend to 20 p.c. With the prospect of a cessation of hostilities in Europe, he is hoping for a lightening of the burden of taxation, particularly the Excess Profits Tax, which, he declares, has weighed heavily on the company's financial resources. Profits were £41,977, against £42,098. Its 5/- shares are quoted at 14/6.

WALL STREET

NEW YORK, Friday.—The Stock Exchange was steady, but quiet, at the opening. Steels, Motors and Rubers led a selective recovery, although demand was light.

The market turned upward again in the final hour, with gains of fractions to more than two points predominating.

The close was firm. The turnover of 642,000 shares comprised 792 issues, of which 503 advanced and 117 declined.—(Reuter.)

MINE FLOODED

More trouble is being experienced by San Francisco Mines of Mexico, Ltd. A statement issued by the Union Corporation Ltd., which acts as secretaries to the company, says: "As a result of four days' unprecedented rainfall in the San Francisco Del Oro area, the Clarines mine has been flooded, and the lower level of the 'Frisco mine has been similarly affected. No major damage has occurred to the mine. It is expected that production will be reduced by about 50 p.c. for the next few weeks." The 10/- shares are quoted at 10/6.

German guns were still firing across the Straits of Dover at a late hour last night.

Mrs. Kavanagh has favoured us with instructions to SELL BY PUBLIC AUCTION, in our Salerooms, 50 PRUSSIA STREET, DUBLIN,

ON WEDNESDAY NEXT, SEPTEMBER 20, at 3 p.m.,
THE VALUABLE FARM KNOWN AS CHEEVERSTOWN AND WHITEHALL, CLONDALKIN,

139 Statute acres. Held in Fee-Simple, subject to a Revised Land Commission Annuity of £64 10s. 2d., with house, containing 3 rooms and kitchen; cow-house for 30 cows (up to dairy requirements), stabling for 4 horses, barn, calf-house, pig-house and machine-house. These lands have not been let, but grazing in the district made from £12 to £14 per acre this year.

The Poor Law Valuation of Cheeverstown is £70 5/-, and Whitehall Lands £73 5/-, Buildings £1. Current Rates on whole property amount to £68 8s. 1d.
